Designing courses to deliver effective teaching and significant learning is the best way to set students up for success, and to involve readers through the process. The authors have worked with faculty world-wide, and share the stories of how faculty have transitioned from theory to practice. They start with Dee Fink's foundation of integrating course design. Then they provide additional design ideas to expand the course blueprint to implement plans for communication, accessibility, technology integration, as well as the assessment design as it fits into the assessment of programs and institutions, and how faculty can use what they learn to meet their program goals. This title suggests practical guidelines for ensuring quality in learning provision.

For both new and existing staff in HE, this book provides a handbook on learning to teach. Whilst considering the scholarship of teaching and learning underpinned teaching and learning for the last half century, the book also takes into account the changing nature of the student population, institutions and potentially of learning itself. Features international perspectives on pedagogy.

This is the only book that gives bank managers the practical tools they need to become effective sales leaders and to develop a successful sales culture. It builds on practices developed by the co-authors who argue that any financial institution can maximize its success by combining the principles and practices of leadership with those of sales management and applying them to everyone in the organization. Topics discussed include: defining a strategy and vision; developing lines of communications; building relationships and empowering sales staff; monitoring and tracking performance; coaching, directing, and controlling the sales force; and putting it all together by setting a vision for the future.

I feel strongly about teaching science and I want quality science education for all students. This book aims to provide a sequential guide for learning how to teach primary science. Reception, it's a funny old term, rather like a waiting room, a foyer, or a gathering place before the main event. The main event here being the start of Key Stage One and school life. Reception has in many ways been seen as a 'holding pen', a preparation for 'school readiness' rather than a stage and age in its own right. Neil Farmer draws upon his experience of working with and supporting schools and leaders up and down the country and abroad - in many instances going right back to the basics - and putting forward suggestions and strategies that will assist teachers in gaining an ownership of their classroom and a true understanding of their vital role as a facilitator, mediator and coach. It is not a 'one cap fits all solution', but rather some practical tips that Reception teachers may decide to employ, alter and make their own.

This book leads you through the process of designing a learning-centered course. It is written as a "how-to" handbook, providing step-by-step guidance on creating a pathway to student learning, including 26 workboxes (also available free online) that lead you through each element of the course design process and promote a rich reflection process akin to being in a workshop setting. The authors prompt you to (1) consider the distinctive characteristics of your students; (2) clearly articulate your course learning goals; (3) create aligned summative assessments; (4) identify the specific knowledge, skills, and attitudes students will need in order to be successful; (5) craft effective learning experiences, informed by the well-documented research on how people learn; and (6) incorporate formative assessment to ensure you and your students are staying on track. Completion of the sequence of worksheets leads to a poster as a visual display of your course design. This graphic depiction of your course ties the components together, provides a clear map of action for teaching your course, for modifying as you evaluate the success of particular strategies or want to introduce new concepts, and for developing your syllabus. A rubric for evaluating course posters is included. For faculty developers, this book provides a proven and ready-made resource and text around which to design or redesign learner-centered course design workshops or multi-day course design retreats, replicating or modifying the renowned workshop that the authors have developed at the Air Force Academy for both faculty new to teaching and those with many years of teaching experience under their belt.
