Fixtures and Fittings in Dated Houses 1567-1763 Council for British Archeology

The dating of historic buildings is one of the most important aspects of their study, and one of the most difficult. The knowledge needed to associate particular features with their likely date range can only be acquired through extensive field study of buildings for which dates are known. Initiated by the Historic Buildings Committee, this handbook contains line-drawing illustrations of a wide range of fittings from dated buildings, with their geographical location, and provides a guide to the dating of early modern buildings.

This study examines the changing ways that human communities chose to exploit, modify and ultimately transform their environment over two millennia. Using field archaeology and documentary sources to explore the origins and development of today's historic landscape, it shows how this individual area - in North-West Somerset - cannot be understood in isolation, but must be seen in its wider regional context.
