Created around the world and available only on the web, internet "television" series are independently produced, mostly low budget shows that often feature talented but unknown performers. Typically financed through crowd-funding, they are filmed with borrowed equipment and volunteer casts and crews, and viewers find them through word of mouth or by chance. The fifth in a series focusing on the largely undocumented world of internet TV, this book covers 573 children's series created for viewers 3 to 14. The genre includes a broad range of cartoons, CGI, live-action comedies and puppetry. Alphabetical entries provide websites, dates, casts, credits, episode lists and storylines.

Bringing Up B  be meets Last Child in the Woods in this "fascinating exploration of the importance of the outdoors to childhood development" (from a series of reviews) from a Swedish-American mother who sets out to discover if the nature-centric parenting philosophy of her native Scandinavia is a healthier, happier lives for her American children. Could the Scandinavian philosophy of "There's no such thing as bad weather, only bad clothing" be the key to happier, healthier lives for American children? When Swedish-born Linda   keson McGurk moved to Indiana, she quickly learned that the nature-centric parenting philosophies of her native Scandinavia were not the norm. In Sweden, children play outdoors year-round, regardless of the weather. Letting babies nap outside in freezing temperatures is common and recommended by physicians. Preschoolers spend their days climbing trees, catching frogs, and learning to compost, and environmental education is a key part of the public-school curriculum. In the US, McGurk found that children were more sheltered, deserted, and preschoolers were getting drilled on academics with little time for free play in nature. And when a swimming outing at a park resulted in a fine from a park officer, McGurk realized that the parenting philosophies of her native country and her adopted homeland were very different. Struggling to decide what was best for her family, McGurk embarked on a six-month journey to Sweden with her two daughters to see if a change in a place where spending time in nature is considered essential to a good childhood. Insightful and lively, There's No Such Thing as Bad Weather, Only Bad Clothing is a fascinating personal narrative that illustrates how Scandinavian culture could hold the key to raising healthy, resilient, and confident children in America.

Barbie prepares her horse for a competition, but Tawny is afraid to jump.
