Nursing Tracheostomy Care Quiz

In 2008, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) announced that payment would not be rendered for certain conditions determined to be hospital-acquired (Kuhn, 2008). One such condition, identified in the 2008 announcement, is pressure ulcers. Although several guidelines and quality improvement initiatives have been developed to guide and improve tracheostomy care, concerns continue to exist over the possible decannulation of the patient while performing such care (Fiona, 2010). Specifically, the increased occurrence of skin breakdown at the tracheostomy site over the last two years has caused hospital-wide concern. Limited and outdated research exists for prevention of skin breakdown at the tracheostomy site. Gauze dressing is the highly preferred intervention by the institution's nurses in the prevention of tracheostomy skin breakdown when compared to the use of a Duo Derm dressing on patients in the Intensive Care Unit (ICU). The purpose of this paper is to compare two types of dressings that are being used in the prevention of tracheostomy skin breakdown, and identify an evidenced based protocol and make recommendations for further research to examine and test new products that claim to prevent skin breakdown. The study will conduct a case study analysis of patients using two different types of dressings with a subsequent comparison of the data. The data analyzed was secondhand data that was obtained within the scope of nursing practice of 45 patients who had the two products applied under their tracheostomies based on physician service. The data confirmed researchers' theories that the best dressing to be used in preventing skin breakdown will be the gauze dressing. The data results also show that nothing is 100% full proof and that further research must be conducted as new products enter the market. Identifying an evidenced base best practices protocol will allow for better care of patients in preventing skin breakdown at the tracheostomy site, and prevent significant losses in fees.

individuals in the United States are caregivers of an older adult with a health or functional limitation. The nation's family caregivers provide the lion's share of long-term care for our older adult population. They are also central to older adults' access to and receipt of health care and community-based social services. Yet the need to recognize and support caregivers is among the least appreciated challenges facing the aging U.S. population.
