A Note Upon the Decoration of St. Peter Catholic Church, Reading, Pennsylvania

St. Peter Catholic Church, built between 1852 and 1858, marks the introduction of the Gothic Revival style to Memphis, Tennessee. This thesis examines this church in relation to the larger body of work attributed to the architect, Patrick Charles Keely. It is clear that St. Peter Catholic Church, with its crenellated octagonal towers joined by a parapet, is an anomaly among Keely-designed churches and has its closest affinities with the Old Louisiana State Capitol Building, completed in 1852. It is suggested that St. Peter may reflect a rare attempt by Keely to create a regionally oriented Gothic Revival style. The research gathered for this thesis was also presented in an exhibituon, held at St. Peter Catholic Church from June 16 to July 6, 2019. Six didactic panels combined text and images to highlight Gothic Revival architecture, the career of Patrick
