how the 1998 Act replaces the 1984 Act, and implements the EU General Data Protection Directive passed in 1995. It examines:

- * The special rules introduced for the processing of sensitive data, for example, racial or ethnic origins
- * The provision to restrict the transfer of data outside the UK and countries within the EU unless the transfer is necessary to perform a contract-a particularly significant provision given the increasing use of the Internet
- * The extended protection to manual records in the UK. The Act applies to anyone holding any records of living individuals in computer, paper and manual records. It strengthens the right of the individual and sets new rules for the transfer of data outside the European Union. This revised edition takes this into account.

Under sections 55A and 55B of the Data Protection Act 1998 introduced by the Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008, the Information Commissioner may, in certain circumstances, serve a monetary penalty notice on a data controller. The monetary penalty is not kept by the Commissioner, but must be paid into the Consolidated Fund owned by HM Treasury. The Commissioner's underlying objective in imposing a monetary penalty notice is to promote compliance with the Act. It is clear from the wording of the sections 55A & 55B of the Act that a monetary penalty notice will only be appropriate in the most serious situations. Therefore in such cases the monetary penalty must be sufficiently meaningful to act both as a sanction and a deterrent. This doesn't change the Commissioner's commitment to provide guidance simplifying the Act where possible and making it easier for organisations to comply with their obligations under the Act. This is the statutory guidance issued under the Act and as such has been approved the Secretary of State

Examining the Impact of the 1998 Data Protection Act for Financial Services

The 1998 Data Protection Act provides a framework for the way in which organisations should collect and process personal information. It has far-reaching implications for library and information managers who hold personal data on computer or on paper, or who may be called on to advise their colleagues. This practical

The Data Protection Act 1998 repeals the Data Protection Act 1984 and the Access to Personal Files Act 1987 and will mean massive upheaval in current practice for most users of personal data. The Government has estimated the start-up costs for private industry to be L1.2 billion, with an on-going annual outlay of L635 million. This invaluable guide fully explains the operation of the 1998 Act and clearly describes the dramatic and potentially costly changes to the law, including: The new definition of processing - meaning many more operations concerning data will be caught than under the old law.

The expansion of the definition of data to include manual records. A new category of sensitive personal data where, in most cases, an individuals consent will be a necessary prerequisite to processing. Updated and amended data protection principles and a banning of the transfer of data to non-EEA countries, save in exceptional circumstances.

Data protection is an increasingly important area of business law, perhaps more so as a result of the Data Protection Act 1998. This work gives practical guidance to the Act. Coverage includes the difficult transitional arrangements between the 1984 Act and the new law, and highlighted sections showing the main changes between the two. The text of the Act and Directive are included.
