Intended as the primary text for introductory courses on medical anthropology, this book integrates human biological data relevant to health and disease with both evolutionary theory and the social environments that more often than not produce major challenges to health and survival. Because students who take this fastest-growing anthropology course come from a variety of disciplines (anthropology, biology, especially pre-med students, and health sciences, especially), the text does not assume anything beyond a basic high-school level familiarity with human biology and anthropology. The authors first present basic biological information on a particular health condition and then expand their analysis to include evolutionary, historical, and cross-cultural perspectives. Among the topics covered are nutrition, infectious disease, stress, reproductive health, behavioral disease, aging, race/racism and health, mental health, and healers and healing.

In this enlightening book, the third in the success series, Dag Heward-Mills writes about the cardinal features of Solomon's success and how it is applicable to our lives today. Also remember that wealth is neutral which means it can be used for good or bad. In the remaining part of the book the author studies the principles Solomon used to take him to these heights of success. Solomon obeyed his father's instructions, he knew the secret of building the temple of God and that it is not possible to build anything unless you have peace and stability. The secret of righteousness lies in asking God to help you discern between good and bad. The last principle is to use your mind. If you become a Christian it doesn't mean you should stop using your mind. God expects you to use your eyes and mind to make decisions. Jesus is not only power to us. He is power and wisdom. When you effectively combine power and wisdom, you will begin to experience Solomon's success.
