Neural networks have been widely used in many applications, such

as image
classification and

language
processing, and
control of
autonomous systems. These networks work by
mapping inputs to
outputs through a
sequence of layers. At each layer, the input to that layer undergoes an affine transformation followed by a simple nonlinear transformation before being passed to the next layer. Neural networks are being used for increasingly important tasks, and in some cases, incorrect outputs can lead to costly consequences, hence validation of correctness at each layer is vital. The sheer size of the networks makes this not
